In-state and out-of-state students can register on campus to vote in November elections during this week's Voter Registration Drive.

Students register to vote

Registering to vote just got easier. And more reliable.

Both in-state and out-of-state students can register and pledge to vote at several BYU campus locations during this week's Voter Registration Drive.

"We're trying to give students easy access to express their legal right to vote," said Nate Green, executive director of student life.

Volunteers are reminding students they need to re-register if they have changed their address or gotten married and changed their names. If students registered in a previous year, and have not changed their name or address, they need not register again.

This year BYUSA and the Student Advisory Council have sought solutions to past problems and hope to have a bigger, more reliable voting rally, Green said.

Credibility in similar registration programs at BYU has shaken over the last few years.

Last year problems occurred when students did not realize that registering to vote in Utah causes them to lose residency in their home state.

This year a disclosure at each booth reminds them of this policy.

Last year the Utah County Auditors Office was forced to hire 11 temporary workers to answer phone calls about incorrect voter registration. Many students failed to fill out their forms with correct, current information.

This year 50 to 100 volunteers are on hand at the various booths to help fill in the forms correctly. These volunteers met last Thursday for a crash course in voting registration to help them help students, Green said.

In 2000, many students discovered that their photocopied out-of-state registration forms, provided by BYUSA, were unacceptable or sent in too late.

This year out-of-state students are receiving original forms and are required to mail them in themselves if they are not from Utah.

New Hampshire, North Dakota and Wyoming do not accept the form as official registration. This will be made clear at the booths, Green said.

"By making it convenient, I think it will encourage people to register," said Jamie Fu[illegible] 18, a freshman from Santa [illegible]osa, Calif., majoring in elementary education. Funk is a BYUSA volunteer at one of the booths.

Makeover for Daily Universe

By Rebecca Sederberg Kellogg

The Daily Universe is getting a facelift.

But whether readers will be able to pick out the print results of nine months of behind-the-scenes work is up for debate.

"Most people, when they see the redesigned paper the first day, are going to know something is different, but they won't be able to articulate what it is," said Phillip Ritzenberg, the designer from New York who engineered the redesign. "That's the first level. On the second level, they'll know it looks cleaner."

A few changes will be more noticeable than others.

The scripture of the day will be moved to the new, more reader-friendly opinion page, re-christened "Issues and Ideas."

Less noticeably, there will be drop caps on columns and features.

When Ritzenberg approached the old format, he saw several elements that needed to be changed.

"Why are there all these little stories on pages 1 and 2?" he asked. "In the new layout there will be a brand new page 2 — international and national news all in one place, easy to find."

Ritzenberg said in the redesign he did what only the outside person can do — ask, "Why not this way?"

The staff at NewsNet is generally excited about the revamped product.

"Change is always scary," said The Daily Universe's editor-in-chief, Andrea Ludlow, 21, a senior from Santee, Calif., majoring in print journalism. "But the more I saw the

Tobacco companies cough up settlement

By Ember Herrick

Some consider it blood money, others a tax-free gift, but no matter how you look at it, everyone wants a piece of it.

After countless fatalities and years of legal battles, tobacco companies are finally coughing up money to help pay the health care cost of smoking-related diseases.

The only problem now is deciding who gets a piece.

Utah, along with 45 other states, reached an agreement settlement in 1998 with four major tobacco companies, making them pay for the health care costs of treating a generation of smokers who suffer from lung cancer, emphysema and heart disease.

Although the suit was designed to compensate Utah for years of health expenses, the agreement does not stipulate what the money must be used for, Utah State Treasurer Edward Alter said.

The medical community wanted the tobacco settlement money for research, educators wanted to spend it on youth anti-smoking programs, and the state treasurer wanted to invest it for the future.

"The legislature split the baby," Alter said. "Fifty percent of the money Utah gets annually from the tobacco settlement is invested much like a retirement fund with 60 percent in stocks and 40 percent in bonds."

According to Alter, there is $37.9 million in the trust fund.

But that number will not be increasing this year, because the estimated $16 million settlement check Utah is anticipating for 2003 will all go toward balancing the state budget.

If Utah puts that money in the trust fund, Alter projects the interest will

California permits stem cell research

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — In a move that runs counter to Bush administration policy, California has adopted a new law that opens the state's doors to stem cell researchers.

Gov. Gray Davis signed legislation Sunday that expressly permits the research, which has been strongly opposed by anti-abortion groups and the Roman Catholic church because it involves the use of fetal and embryonic tissue.

The issue captured headlines more than a year ago when President Bush restricted federal funding for human embryonic stem cell research to a select number of existing cell lines.

Supporters of the California legislation say the law will attract scientists who someday may be able to cure chronic diseases through the research. Proponents include actor Christopher Reeve, who has been a stem cell research activist since an accident left him paralyzed from the neck down. He believes stem cell research could help treat paralysis.

Brewers avoid conservative beer festival

SALT LAKE CITY — Some Western beer brewers avoided a beer festival this weekend because state liquor laws would have required them to water down their lagers and ales.

There were 60 different beers on tap from 20 different breweries Saturday at the annual Gallivan Center's Brewers Festival in Salt Lake City. Some of them were from out of state.

But Eric Dunlap, brewing manager for Red Rock Brewing Co. in Salt Lake City, said there are a lot of breweries that did not show up, because they do not make beer with 3.2 percent alcohol — Utah's legal limit.

"We're missing a lot of great breweries. There are a lot that specialize in styles that aren't here," Dunlap said.

Kevin Crompton, former head brewer for Uinta Brewing Co. in Salt Lake City, says that thanks to the liquor laws here, "It's like an 'Iron Curtain.' It's the 'Zion Curtain.'"

New York mayor dines in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan — Wearing a flak jacket, New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg dined with the commander of U.S. forces in Afghanistan on a surprise one-day visit to the war-shattered country.

Bloomberg flew into Bagram Air Base from Turkey on a U.S. C-17 on Sunday. Bagram serves as America's military headquarters in Afghanistan and is home to some 3,500 U.S. soldiers.

After meeting Lt. Gen. Dan K. McNeill, the two ate an American-style dinner of pork strips, ham, cornbread and salad at an outdoor mess hall with several other U.S. troops.

"There's a lot of people over here who are defending those of us back in America and the least we can do is say thank you," Bloomberg said.

"I was close by and I would never forgive myself if I did not stop by and just try to express how much everybody in the United States appreciates what our armed services are doing around the world."

U.N. report highlights need for reform

UNITED NATIONS — Countless committee meetings, fat reports written in dense language, reams of paperwork that tie up a complex web of officials.

That's not a critic's cynical view of the United Nations. It's what the U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan himself says about the world body in a report released Monday on the need for reform.

"We must be prepared to change with the times — constantly adjusting to new conditions and new needs," Annan told a news conference at U.N. headquarters.

Calling on his officials and the 190 member nations to help redraw priorities, Annan's report to the General Assembly prescribes streamlining various departments, simplifying labyrinthine procedures, firing or retraining staff and recruiting more skilled people.

"Activities which are no longer relevant must be dropped, while on new issues ... the U.N. must deepen its knowledge, sharpen its focus and act more effectively," the 55-page report said.

Scripture of the Day

"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Troops besiege Arafat compoun

Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank — A defiant Yasser Arafat dug in at his besieged compound Monday, rejecting Israel's demand to hand over the names of all those inside.

As Israeli troops settled in, criticism of the blockade — the third in 10 months — intensified in Israel. Prime Minister Ariel Sharon is boosting Arafat's popularity, instead of sidelining him, the government's detractors said.

In another development, an Israeli man was killed and three of his children, ages 9, 12 and 18, were wounded in a Palestinian shooting attack in the West Bank city of Hebron. The 9-year-old was reported in serious condition.

The assault on Arafat's office has made an already tense situation even more volatile. With Arafat ringed by troops and confined to a building Palestinians claim is in danger of collapse, Israel cannot guarantee the Palestinian leader's safety.

Harm to Arafat, even unintentional, could ignite the region.

Arafat's isolation has triggered street protests, some orchestrated and some spontaneous, in a replay of the scenes that marked the beginning of fighting two years ago.

On Monday, Palestinians observed a commercial strike and staged more protests, burning tires and pelting soldiers with rocks — events rarely seen in recent months. About 10,000 rallied in Gaza, many schoolchildren bused in for the demonstration.

For the first time since Israeli tanks crashed into the compound on Thursday — retaliating for a Palestinian suicide bombing in Tel Aviv that killed six bystanders — Israeli and Palestinian officials met Monday to begin feeling their way to a solution of the latest crisis. No progress was reported.

Israel is demanding that all the men in Arafat's office building surrender for questioning. Israel originally said 19 terror suspects were in the building, including Tawfik Tirawi, the Palestinian intelligence chief.

"Israel's stand is clear," Sharon said Monday. "Those terrorists must surrender to us. We will not compromise on this."

Israeli commentators said it was not immediately clear why the government is focusing on Tirawi, who half a year ago had participated in security talks with Israeli officials, including the Shin Bet security services chief.

good for a newspaper to get a facelift once in a while, and it compliments what we've done in the interior of the paper, which is the reorganization of the newsroom," said Newsnet Managing Director Robb Hicken.

A man with almost 50 years of experience in journalism, Ritzenberg served as assistant managing editor of the New York Daily News for 15 years and was one of the founders of the Society of Newspaper Design.

He shared his design wisdom with the staff of The Daily Universe in a seminar.

"Major newspapers don't redesign often enough. Nothing works forever. Papers usually wait until the paper has outgrown the design," Ritzenberg said.

He said, college papers, as well as city newspapers, need to pay attention to design.

"The mission's the same: To communicate with a community — inform a community. A college is not a whole lot different from a small city. A college paper needs to be committed to quality so students turned out of the university understand quality."

n said, "We recognize that are lots of students from states too. Students from e of Utah can pick up d instructions on how to send in their registration as well."

BYUSA volunteers hope their efforts will increase the percentage of student voters.

Currently only 32 percent of students nationwide are registered to vote, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

"I think a lot more students will register to vote this year because we have more booths, we're not just in the Wilkinson Center like last year," Green said. "We're also going down to the dorms, and we'll also have volunteers at Battle of the Bands this weekend."

A booth will be set up in the Wilkinson Center from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily.

Two booths will float among other main buildings such as the N. Eldon Tanner Building, the Jesse Knight Humanities Building and the J. Rueben Clark Building.

BYUSA is also asking students to sign a pledge sheet to commit to vote on Nov. 5. Those that are already registered are asked to pledge as well.

state constitution allows the y to be used to balance the budget only in dire circumes with a three-fourths ity vote.

n't think the situation is that dire," Alter said, "I am worried this sets a dangerous precedent."

The other 50 percent of the settlement is spent annually, at the discretion of the state.

Ideally the money would be earmarked to fund research and anti-tobacco education, and offset the costs of rehab and health care.

But Alter said that is often not the case.

Because of a loophole in the contract, 50 percent of the money Utah receives annually is directly deposited in the state general fund where the legislature decides who gets a piece of it.

The state invested money is primarily in mutual funds, but that money is also complicated by a conflict of interest.

According to the Washington D.C. Investors Responsibility Research Center, $600,000 of Utah's settlement is currently in tobacco stocks, primarily Phillip Morris.

This has upset many health advocates like Utah County Health Educator Terry Gettling.

"We finally get the tobacco companies to give us the money we deserve, and then we give it back to them? In doing so, we support them, we sustain them, and they become stronger," Gettling said.

e smallpox program is related ept. 11 and the biological threats that have occurred since then, said Bob Black, administrator of donor center operations.

"We are making this under the direction of the government just in case there is any biological warfare or terrorism," Black said.

The plasma collection process is similar to donating blood, Purdy said.

As the blood is being drawn, it is run through a machine that separates the red blood cells from the plasma in the blood. After the plasma has been collected, the red blood cells are returned to the donor and the plasma is stored for use in the smallpox program.

The plasma that is collected is actually used to make a treatment called vaccinia immune globulin, or VIG, which is very similar to the smallpox vaccine, said Julie Jackson, donor recruiter for Serologicals.

The VIG is used to treat a smallpox outbreak or to counteract the side effects of vaccination.

"We have been blessed," Jackson said. "I have had no need to advertise. Word of mouth is just amazing in this area. People are more than willing to join this program. It is something they can do for their country, a patriotic thing."

What's the blame in ballot blunder

Many blame a lack of training for Florida's recent ballot blunders. Cited as an election reform expert and sounding like Yoda, Doug Chapin of Electionline.org said, "It's possible to do too much too quickly, and buying new machines does not reform make."

What good are new machines if no one knows how to use them? Florida's poll employees have proven it must take a scholastic degree to operate the polling process. Instead of spending $32 million on new machines, Florida should have invested that money in developing such a degree to train future poll workers. Since BYU is in the business of building, (consider the new buildings popping up on campus), why not expand their degree offerings and introduce the BB, bachelor of ballots, and offer it through the School of Technology.

To be admitted to the program, interested students will submit an essay in English, Spanish, or Creole describing their familiarity with Florida, whether they were born there, grew up there, have grandparents living there, or at least have taken a trip to Disneyworld.

After admittance students will take the following courses in order: Basic reading and writing. This course will teach adults what many people learned in elementary school and will also go over technical vocabulary such as "on", "off", "vote button" and "touch-screen". The next course is Ballot counting. It will explain the difference between over-counting and under-counting. Many students will complain with the excuse that the computers are counting for them, but the professor will explain the importance of understanding the principle of counting when the computers fail at it. Next students will take Master activator. This class will be a semester worth of turning on election machines and timing how long they take to boot-up.

After these core courses are completed students can take the following in any order: History of Florida voting taught be Governor Jeb Bush, an Internship in mock election exercises, Comparative elections: Looking at states that have done it right.

This curriculum will prepare students to become election verification specialists, activators, and demonstrators with pay at $85/ day or more depending on the title. By offering this program, BYU would be doing a great deal of good preparing workers to handle the complicated task of vote processing, which Americans have been involved in since the beginning of their government. Maybe the new athletic building will have room to house this program.

Behind the scenes ...

I was very disappointed with an article that might make one assume that the purpose of the UVSC Religious Studies program is to rival (and trump) BYU's very important, but very different, religious education program. Of course, that is not the purpose of the Religious Studies Program at UVSC.

The purpose of the Religious Studies Emphasis is provide students in Utah with the opportunity to pursue an academic study of religion. The purpose of the Religion Department at BYU is stated very clearly on the department's Web page:

Religious Education at Brigham Young University builds the Kingdom of God by teaching and preserving doctrine and history of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We spread the light of the Restoration through classroom instruction, gospel scholarship, and outreach to the larger community.

Religious Education provides instruction that is doctrinally sound, spiritually inspiring, and intellectually stimulating. We use teaching methods that are loyal to the Restoration and that engage the students, build faith, and strengthen testimony.

Clearly the purpose of the BYU Religion Department is not primarily academic. Instead, its purpose is primarily spiritual, devotional, and inspirational. Anyone who had done the requisite research for a respectable article on UVSC's Religious Studies Program would immediately see that its purposes are not devotional or spiritual. It is supposed to be a rigorous academic program along the lines of those at non-denominational universities such as Florida State University. So, the defensive attitude of the article seems entirely misplaced. It seems to us that there are important reasons for both types of study of religion.

Those faithful to a certain religious tradition certainly need devotional and spiritual religious instruction. My first-hand experience tells me that BYU's Religion Department does a wonderful job at accomplishing this task. But others who are interested in understanding religion from an academic standpoint need something different. This is what UVSC wants to provide. Since you seem to misunderstand the difference between an academic and a devotional study of religion, you also make the error of thinking that UVSC's program is supposed to give an edge to students who pursue a career in the CES. This is wrong, of course.

In fact, the Religious Studies Program has nothing to do with the LDS Church Educational System, and is not geared in any way to help students who pursue that line of work. Again, the CES provides one with a devotional/spiritual education. The Religious Studies program, like any other academic discipline, is for students with an academic interest in religion. We hope that some of our students will go on to pursue graduate degrees in Religious Studies at prestigious universities. Although we have a friendly relationship with the UVSC LDS Institute and keep them informed about what we are doing, they are well aware of our academic purposes and are not mislead into thinking that Religious Studies is supposed to be an alternative route for a CES career.

Furthermore, you state "Not all BYU students feel UVSC's program could benefit them." And then you go on to give one example. It would truly be astonishing if you couldn't find at least one BYU student who would not be benefited by a UVSC degree. After all, for any program of study at BYU, there is at least one student (if not thousands) who will not benefit from it. So, your claim is vacuous.

Why make it? It is clearly an attempt to disparage UVSC's program. Such a claim is in the spirit of the competition that you apparently see between the two schools. But the competition doesn't exist. And your claim is so trivial that it does not merit mentioning.

5 cents is all

Dear Editor:

In light of all the current events in our world (The World is Our Campus) I offer the following solution. How about 5 cents donated for every package of Tortillas sold during Homecoming week at participating local supermarkets?

It is obvious that the shenanigans will continue, whether that chagrins you or not, and so why not chip into the $8 million debt for the Student-Athlete complex. Do you hear that? It sounds like Tortillas making noise to the tune of money in the bank. CHA CHING!!

No China atrocity

Dear Editor:

In the Thursday, Sept. 19, issue of The Daily Universe, your opinion page had an editorial headlined with the accusation: "China as guilty as Iraq," and proceeded with gruesome accounts of the inhumane and barbaric acts that seem to occur frequently in China.

We grew up in China and continue to make frequent visits. Happily, we have not witnessed the parallel comparison you make between China and Iraq. What we have seen is something that you have ignored in your editorial: China's great economic growth and democratic progress.

Numerous BYU students and faculty have visited China to participate in cultural exchange programs. Perhaps the Editorial Board would be wise to ask which one of these individuals with first-hand China experience would liken China to Iraq, and which one would go to Iraq bearing the same emotions they have had when journeying to China.

We do not know where the Board obtained its information concerning China and ongoing legislation, but we would be very interested in knowing the source and reliability of the information, which you so confidently present in your story. We know at least that President Bush did not mention China in his U.N. Address.

Since the board, in its editorial, seems to aspire toward ideals of peace, freedom, and democracy, encouraging any progression of these ideals in its sister countries should prove more effective than linking nations together under the name of evil and denouncing their institutions. If you had been to China, particularly Tibet, you would have written a more objective and unbiased editorial than the Sept. 19 one. China and Iraq are two different worlds, as any visit to China will attest.

Apply rules evenly

Dear Editor:

I agree if we apply U.N. rules to Iraq we should apply them also to China. Even more important to that one country which has denied U.N. Sanctions for over 40 years, which has developed a large number of deployed weapons of mass destruction, which is occupying lands against United Nations agreed sanctions -- yes Israel should be treated as a rogue just like Iraq and China.Rules of Law should apply to all.

Let's give back

Dear Editor:

Let's be reasonable. We pay a very low price for tuition because of the generous tithes of church members who "will never even benefit" from BYU and its presence. It's obvious that we'd pay $10,000 or more for tuition if it weren't for the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of tithing money donated by those who will not have any opportunity to study in the university. Yet, we murmur because President Bateman asks for a donation of a few dollars a person.

So why are we asked to help fund a project that we may not benefit from? It's called giving a little back and supporting the school that supports us. Maybe we are investing a lot of money in our athletic program, but our athletes help put us on the map. I hope they live up to the Honor Code standards and give us a good name, but I agree with BYU officials who have said that the existing athletic facilities are not adequate and that the construction will be for the school's future benefit.

When President Bateman announced the project he himself stated that it had been approved by the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve. Maybe this is blind obedience, but all I can say is, "If it's good enough for President Hinckley, it's good enough for me!" Let's count our many blessings and support BYU officials and BYU athletics.

Devotional devotee

Dear Editor:

Not being able to attend in person, I look forward to watching the devotional each Tuesday with my wife and small children on BYU-TV.

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland said my primary responsibility as a father is to place my family in situations where they can feel the spirit. That is why BYU Devotionals are so important to me. Along with Sunday meetings and Family Home Evening, Tuesday Devotional provides another opportunity for me to complete this responsibility.

I am sorry to say that though the dancers were obviously talented, the Devotional did not place my family in a situation to feel the spirit.

The music was harsh and the dancing suggestive. We ended up turning the television off very disappointed that such precious time was wasted. Could there not be a better use for Devotional time than to display worldly values?

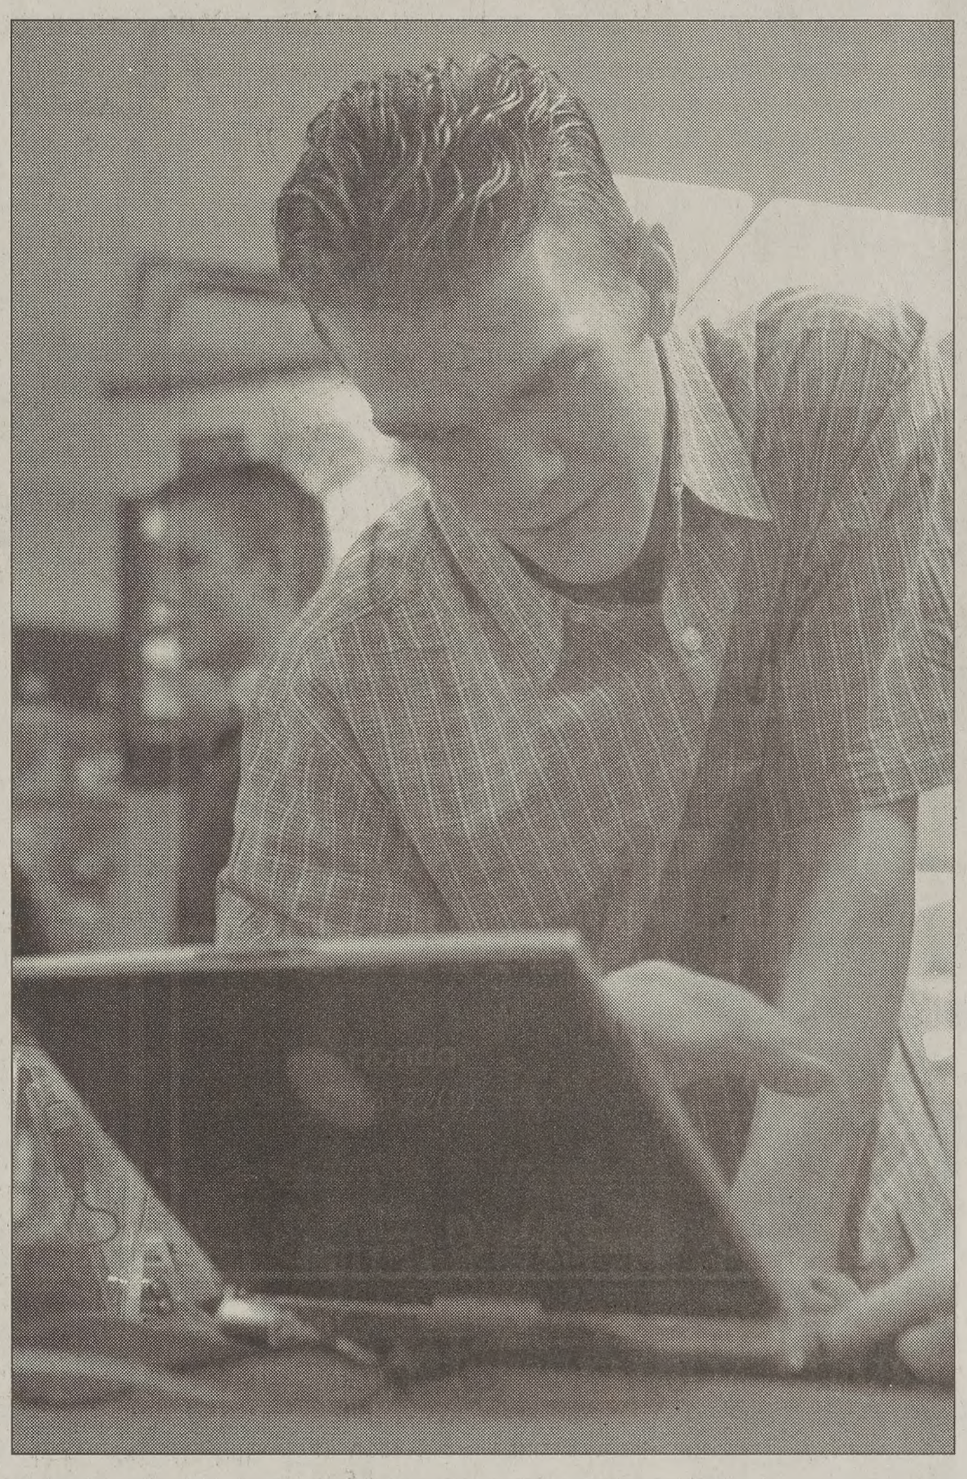
Laptop allows students to turn PC into notepad



A BYU Bookstore employee displays some of the features of the new Tablet PC.

cgibby@byu.edu
NewsNet Associate Web Editor

Imagine a laptop that allows you to fold it over and write on the screen like you do with your spiral-bound notebook.

This is the vision of Acer Computing — a dream that became a reality this fall with the release of its TravelMate 100 notebook computer now available in the BYU Bookstore.

"If you think about a standard laptop, it's so intrusive," Acer regional sales executive Kelley Impey said.

She said the clacking of fingernails on keyboards in classrooms is a distraction to students, but the TravelMate computer can eliminate such annoyances.

The system can function as a normal ultraportable notebook with its standard keyboard, or convert to its "Tablet PC" mode, allowing users to write in their own handwriting when taking notes or making corrections directly on other documents.

According to Impey, the new computer will carry a price tag in the range of $2,000 to $2,500, comparable to other high-end notebooks.

The TravelMate won't be sold at retail stores in Utah, Impey said.

Joe Allred, hardware buyer for the BYU Bookstore, said the store is one of the first locations in the country to carry the system, which will be marketed primarily to students.

Allred said, "While the BYU Bookstore may bring in other tablet PCs as they become available, we believe that the Acer TravelMate will help meet student and faculty needs."

The Bookstore's General Merchandise Supplies Manager Dave Smith emphasized that the Bookstore doesn't officially endorse the Acer system; rather, it is one of the many laptop options they promote.

A special version of Microsoft's Windows XP Professional operating system called Windows XP Tablet PC Edition will power the system.

Under Windows XP Tablet PC, an addition to Microsoft's Office suite lets users use handwritten "ink" in popular applications such as Word and Excel.

Many industry analysts believe that tablet PCs will change the way students function in classroom situations.

"This (the classroom) is actually the first, best place I can think of to use a Tablet PC. I see very little use for one in my life, but if I had had one during my schooling I think that would have been very helpful," wrote columnist Thomas Brady in an article about electronics in education on the tech Web site Geek.com.

Brady discussed the advantages of tablet PCs.

"It's easier to carry than a notebook, and the touch-screen makes for faster navigating — very important when you're trying to keep up with a lecture. And for note taking, handwriting recognition is faster than typing, if not as accurate," he said.

According to Brady, the use of a tablet PC makes more sense than using handwriting recognition systems on personal digital assistants, such as Palm Computing's Graffiti and Compaq's Transcriber software.

"One thing I don't get is note-taking on an iPAQ (PDA). I'm sorry, I am thrilled at handwriting recognition software, but neither Graffiti nor Transcriber is really ready for note taking. Note taking at a meeting is one thing; note taking in a biology or history class is an entirely different thing," Brady wrote.

"Men in their 40s may have a harder time adjusting to their diagnoses psychologically, and this could have adverse effects on their survival," Bird said.

Sexual potency is also possibly a more important concern for these men, Bird said. It may influence what treatment they choose or actually delaying initiation of that treatment.

Additionally, men with advanced prostate cancer could also be concerned about the lag time before treatment takes effect or the difference in treatments, Merrill said. These two factors may have affected observations of the study.

A number of treatments are available to prostate cancer patients including watchful surgery, radiation therapy or hormonal therapy, according to NCI. In advanced stages, patient's need to be concerned about time before starting treatment to prevent further spread of the cancer.

The BYU study published in a recent issue of "Cancer Causes and Control" bases its information from nearly 300,000 prostate cancer patients in nine U.S. states including Connecticut, Hawaii, Iowa, New Mexico, Utah, Georgia, California, Washington and Michigan during 1973 and 1998.

BYU student, professor find pattern in rural LDS names

By Ruth Busbee
ruth@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

When Geraldine LaDue came to BYU in the 1970s, she noticed people started calling her Gerela (pronounced Jerr-La) or Sister Due and wondered what was going on.

LaDue decided to do a research paper on this phenomenon for an English class and it sparked the interest of her professor, assistant professor of English Don Norton. Norton for the past three years has been formally researching naming patterns in the LDS culture, specifically in rural LDS communities.

In researching the phenomena her name created, LaDue discovered that parents in rural LDS communities would often add prefixes, such as Da, De, Jo, Le, Va and Von to names, and use them to create such gems as DeVana, and LaMoyne.

Parents would also use common suffixes such as –ann, -lee and –ene to create names like Berydene and Crystalene.

"This is not exclusively an LDS phenomena, but it is predominantly an LDS thing," Norton said.

Norton has discovered that these unique naming patterns started in the 1890s, which make researching the origins of the trend difficult. The naming patterns are still current today, although they are not as predominant.

"It had its hey-days through the 20s, 30s, 40s and 50s," said Norton. "If you look in phone books, that's where you find most of these people showing up."

LaDue discovered that parents in rural LDS communities would often add prefixes, such as Da, De, Jo, Le, Va and Von to names, and use them to create such gems as DeVana, and LaMoyne.

LaRae Ellsworth, the department secretary for the communications department, has a first name that follows Mormon naming patterns, but doesn't know if her name is a combination name.

"I was named after my mom's good friend from college," Ellsworth said.

Mormon naming patterns might not be present in today's student body. A search of the BYU directory yielded no current students with the names LaVell, LaRue, LaRay, LaVon, ElRay, DeVana, LaMoyne or Berydene.

Why did the LDS community begin to use combination names in the first place?

"It relates to the question of why the African American community is partial to unusual names such as Kisha," Norton said, "It's a cultural thing. It got started, took off and it seemed to appeal to Latter-day Saints. I personally have come to conclude that it was simply an effort to mark a child as being clearly individual and distinctive."

Woodworth is also a strong advocate of the benefits of regular massages.

"Massages are essential because they help your body get rid of all the lactic acids and other different toxins," said Woodworth. "They are also the best form of relaxation."

While it would seem the spa experience caters exclusively to women, McLauchlin said a large number of clients who come in for esthetic treatments are men.

"The spa industry itself within the male clientele is growing extremely rapidly because men are now realizing they want to look good just like women," McLauchlin said. "Because of that, we make many of our services not gender specific."

Popular treatments for men include enzyme and back treatments, waxing, and pedicures, McLauchlin said.

Nick Losee, 22, a junior from Provo, majoring in psychology, has received esthetic treatments.

"Being the family business, I thought I would give it a try," Losee said. "I have been only once since then, but I think we men should have the excuse to do something for ourselves once in a while too, whether it consists of going to a salon for some or playing football."

Fashionable clothes not impossible to find

By Betsy McIff
betsy@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Despite tight budgets, students still manage to fill their closets with a wardrobe reflecting a style all their own.

Fashion magazines and television shows such as "In Style" or "Friends" set the stage for what is "in."

Here at BYU, though, many students are not influenced by these fads of our American culture.

"I am not fashion conscious," said John Mizukawa, 22, a junior from Fort Washington, Md., majoring in zoology. "Most of my clothing comes from older brothers or the clearance racks."

Although the source of Mizukawa's wardrobe may not be the ideal for most, his friend Dave Kim, 22, a junior from Irvine, Calif., still thinks he has style.

"I think fashion reflects your character and personality," Kim said. "It's who you are."

Either way, Mizukawa doesn't mind his clothes.

"When it comes to money, clothing is the last thing I want to spend it on. I would rather buy climbing equipment any day."

Finding the funds to keep wardrobes hip is one of the biggest challenges for students.

"Clothes are expensive," said Heidi Wolters, 21, a senior from Salt Lake, majoring in psychology. "I like to be in style, and so I spend more money on fewer items."

However, there is a solution for this dilemma that most students overlook.

The BYU Bookstore clothing departments carry many of the same styles and brands as department stores, but the benefits include convenience and reasonable prices.

"We go to the same markets as other retail stores," said Jan Rand, buyer supervisor for the woman's department of the Bookstore. "We try to find the styles students want at the price they are willing to pay."

The Bookstore also works hard to supply trendy, yet modest clothing, said Rand. "We do all we can to help students observe the honor code."

Purchasing clothes at the bookstore also helps BYU.

"We are a self supporting and nonprofit business here on campus," Rand said. "The extra money we make builds buildings on campus."

But BYU student Dragos Tieru-Hatu, 23, a junior from Romania, majoring in international studies, finds the clothing at the Bookstore lacking.

"I am very into fashion," Tieru-Hatu said. "If an item doesn't have a label, I won't buy it. The Bookstore is so convenient, I just wish it carried Armani."

The convenience and style of the Bookstore is a benefit for students without the time or funds to shop, but still want quality clothing.

Aaron Hassell, 24, a senior from Golden Colo., majoring in political science shops by the motto, "if the price is right."

"I consider myself trendy," Hassell said. "However, I will never wear anything from Abercrombie."

Young dancers to perform in 'Spectacular

By Kenneth Blaisdell

NewsNet Staff Writer

After 29 years, the BYU Young Dance Makers are finally going to be featured in Homecoming Spectacular.

Created in 1973 by Christine Ollerton as the BYU Children and Teen's Dance Company, the program has not changed all that much.

"The creative dance approach has stayed the same," Ollerton said. "The kids compose and help in larger pieces in problem solving through movement. The interests and attitudes of the kids have changed. The group has gotten more creative and technically better."

Ollerton, a member of the modern dance faculty, studied modern dance with Virginia Tanner, an internationally known pioneer in children's dance. Ollerton also studied with legendary modern dancers, such as Martha Graham and Doris Humphrey.

The children's dance program has 125 participants, ages 8 to 18. The children come from communities throughout the valley, from Payson to Lehi. The BYU Young Dance Makers are also award winning, with several first place awards from state and national competitions.

Last year, not only did the group put together its company showcase, but also participated in the Light of the World. The cast of young LDS performers enjoyed having the Dance Makers around.

"I met one of my best friends, Kelsey, in 'Light of the World.'(an Olympic presentation by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints). She made rehearsal tolerable and kept us entertained," said, Jessie Turner, 24, from Palos Verdes, Calif.

"It was a neat experience for these kids to work with us older dancers as positive examples, especially the older teens. It was a fun time and made the spiritual experience real for them."

Including involvement in Olympic activities in Salt Lake, the Young Dance Makers are invited to participate in Utah State Office of Education activities and workshops. They have been invited to perform at art festivals at Soldier Hollow and Sundance.

For Homecoming they will perform a number titled "Fluttering By," choreographed by assistant director Kathleen Sheffield, also of the modern dance department at BYU.

"The piece is a number where children grow butterfly wings," Sheffield said. "And they themselves become a part of the of the kaleidoscope of color and motion."

Heather Cheesman goes up for a shot in a game against Wyoming in Jan. 2002. Cheesman was injured at a practice early last season, ending her collegiate basketball career early. Her teammates said her injury inspired them to play their best, and helped them reach the Sweet Sixteen last season.

Rose said Tuft is a true inspiration for the team.

"More than anything, I know that she personally inspired me."

"Having this happen was the scariest thing ever because Shauna was so far away," Rose said. "We couldn't do anything."

Every day before practice the team would receive updates on Tuft's condition.

"The day Shauna walked back into practice was inspiring. She was my hero," Rose said. "I guarantee she made our team that much better from seeing how she overcame that."

Judkins said he will miss Tuft's presence on the team this year.

"Shauna knew exactly what I needed from her. It will be hard not having her on the team this year."

Tuft said she will not participate in practices this season.

"I'll come to the games and sit in the stands," Tuft said. "It is just easier that way."

Rose said everyone contributed to the success of last year's team, both the injured players as well as the players who could physically compete at the games.

"Everyone played a different part in our season last year, not just those that played on the court. Heather and Shauna inspired us," Rose said.

Rose is going through a hard time of her own. Her knee injury forced her to sit out this season as a medical redshirt.

Rose started 18 games for the Cougars last season.

"When I play, my knee gets all swollen, and it kills me," said Rose. "I can't even walk the next day."

According to Rose, the cartilage on the outside of her knee is gone.

"The way my leg is lined up is that it puts pressure on the outside of my knee," said Rose. "It has completely torn the cartilage up."

Rose will undergo an osteotomy.

According to the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons, the surgeon will reshape the femur to improve Rose's knee's alignment.

The healthy bone and cartilage will be realigned to compensate for the damaged tissue.

The surgery will allow Rose's knee to carry weight evenly.

Rose missed numerous practices last season because of the injury.

"I would practice only about half of the time," Rose said.

"The team would tease that there was a watermelon in my knee. It would just get huge. It is really painful," she said.

Rose said this experience has been one of the hardest in her life.

"It is like your whole life has been taken out from under you."

Rose said her philosophy of life is that if you want something, you just have to work hard and eventually you will get it.

"I never thought I wouldn't play. I just figured that I would play because I wanted it bad enough."

Rose said it is hard knowing that basketball is out of her control.

"This is just something I'm going to have to accept," said Rose. "It goes against my whole philosophy of life."

Tuft and Cheesman have survived life-threatening ordeals.

Rose will support the team all season, rehabilitating the knee in hopes of returning next season.

"We all know that it could all end so easy," Rose said.

Rose said the injuries really put basketball into perspective for the team.

"Hard things make you better. These experiences were some of the hardest things we've had to go through," Rose said.

"Each experience brought us closer. Without these girls, I don't think our team would have even came close to going as far as we did last year."

Football too pricey for some

By Nathaniel H. Wadsworth
nathaniel@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

For many students, the best seat in the house this football season is literally in the house.

"We watch the games on TV," said Eve Annandale from Kauai, Hawaii, whose husband is a graduate student at BYU.

The couple would like to go to the games, but the price of the tickets is too much for them.

For two decades BYU students have had to pay to see the football team perform. Today, however, there are still several schools throughout the country where students do not have to buy tickets to attend the football games.

Of the top 10 teams in the latest USA Today/ESPN Coaches poll, five of them, including the top ranked Miami Hurricanes, do not charge students for football tickets.

Of the five schools in the top 10 that do charge the students, the average season ticket price is $67.

The BYU All-Sport Pass, which sold out days after going on sale, is good for all home athletic events and costs $75. Students can also buy individual football tickets for $14.

David Miles, BYU ticket manager, said schools that do not sell student tickets cover the price of tickets in tuition and other fees. That way, even the students who do not want to attend athletic events help subsidize the programs.

Miles said that although it would be easier to just charge all the students through tuition and other fees, BYU decided it would be better to give the students a choice.

Jeffrey Cannon, 23, a junior from West Lynn, Ore., majoring in political science, agrees with Miles.

"I don't pay for other people to go to the movie; why should I pay for people to go to a football game," Cannon said.

According to a May 31 article in The Chronicle of Higher Education, most colleges that play big-time sports do not generate enough revenue to support the athletic programs. Schools are forced to look to other sources for subsidization – like students and faculty.

This is the case at BYU.

Duff Tittle, associate athletic director of communications, said the money students pay for sports events is necessary to cover the operating costs of the athletic programs.

"Over the last six years we've had two years when we broke even," Tittle said.

Tittle said the annual deficit for the athletic department ranges from $200,000 to $600,000.

Tittle said the department really began having financial trouble when the Western Athletic Conference expanded to 16 teams. Money going to the conference then had to be divided 16 ways.

Tittle said that is part of the reason BYU, along with seven other schools, left the WAC to form the Mountain West Conference. Since then, the athletic department has been doing much better financially.

Ga. Tech running b injured in BYU gam

Associated Press

As he was wheeled off the field with his second knee injury of the game, Tony Hollings covered his face with his hands, refusing even to acknowledge his teammates.

Maybe he knew something they didn't.

Hollings ran for 189 yards and three touchdowns before leaving, helping Georgia Tech rally past Brigham Young 28-19 Saturday in the first meeting between the schools.

He scored his second TD with 13:08 left, giving the Yellow Jackets (3-1) the lead for good. He originally left the game in the third quarter, hurting his knee on a 2-yard run on the first drive of the half, then returned for the next series.

But with Georgia Tech trying to run out the clock, Hollings again hurt the knee, tumbling to the turf after it gave way on a cut during his 36th carry of the game.

"It doesn't look good right now," said Yellow Jackets coach Chan Gailey, who wouldn't speculate on the sev injury.

"After the first time he came o to the sideline and worked it ou and up and down. They cleare back in."

Sports information direct George said Hollings is expecte MRI on Monday.

A converted safety, Hollings game as the leading scorer in after running for eight touchd first three games. He also was rusher in the country.

Georgia Tech already was wit sive end Greg Gathers, out indef a kidney ailment.

"It's not easy when you lose that," Gailey said. "You can't re players like Gathers and m However, the game will come and our guys will get ready."

"It was devastating when he wa wide receiver Will Glover said hope and pray that he's all right come back."

PEETE, Tahiti — It was supposed to be a dream ge: cruising in a luxury sailboat between the -crested islands of the South Pacific, playing on the sand, sipping drinks garnished with ly cut tropical blossoms.

he United States, Dabord has not been charged nnection with the disappearances, but French tigators believe he killed his three companions truggle aboard the boat July 6 or 7.

ord was discovered in Tijuana, Mexico, more week ago, barely clinging to life. His mother, ia Phillips, says her son is on life support after losing on insulin and failing to take his asthma ine, the Los Angeles Times reported.

other son, Dele, 33, organized the sailing trip New Zealand to Hawaii on a 55-foot white aran, the Hakuna Matata. Karlan came along rt of the trip. Dabord met up with the pair in outh Pacific.

e and Karlan planned to stay for a few days on ea. They wound up staying several weeks in the island's Sofitel resort, employees said.

Teva Temauriora, a beach sports coordinator, said Dele – who won an NBA title with Michael Jordan's Chicago Bulls in 1997 – swam and played Frisbee and football.

"Bison came here looking for renewal, and he found a special energy here that he didn't expect," Temauriora said. "They were transformed."

Dele changed his name from Brian Williams during an NBA career in which he played for several teams. The free-spirited center walked away from a $35 million contract with the Detroit Pistons in 1999. Since putting that career behind, he was constantly looking for new projects.

After weeks spent relaxing on the beach, Dele's brother joined them, and they set sail again.

But when the boat returned, Dabord was alone. He stayed in French Polynesia nearly two more weeks.

Several people who met Dabord then said he stood out because he was so tall and stocky, but they said there was nothing else remarkable about him.

Back home in the United States, Dabord, who used to be called Kevin Williams, aroused suspicion when he signed his brother's name to try to buy $152,000 worth of gold in Phoenix. After he was discovered in Tijuana, he was arrested on suspicion of impersonating his younger brother.

Ten weeks after the disappearances, Dele's boat is still docked, a pair of sun-faded French and American flags hanging from its mast. It is wrapped in yellow police tape, and a plastic bag protects the doorknob from new fingerprints.

French investigators, working with FBI agents, found what appear to be traces of blood on the boat, and they were hoping that calls made on the satellite phone would help them map the boat's location at the time of the disappearances.

But they are not counting on finding anything in the deep waters of the South Pacific, prosecutor Michel Marotte said.

"We are not in a very active search for bodies that will likely never be found," he said.

ds' 44 home runs this season led the 600th of his career, Hank Aaron, Ruth and Mays in that exclusive His drop in homers has been eed by a bounce in his batting average. At .370 going into the final week, he should become the oldest first-time batting champion, three years older than Al Oliver in 1982 when he won his first crown.

Until Bonds, the oldest National League batting champion in history was Honus Wagner, who was 37 when he led the NL with a .334 average in 1911. Ted Williams was 40 when he batted .328 to win the AL crown in 1958.

With 191 walks, Bonds already broke his own record of 177 and he could become the first 200-walk man in baseball history. His on-base percentage of .581 is well ahead of the record .553 set by Williams in 1941.

Bonds needs to get on base just six times in the final week to match his record of 342 set last season. The major league record for reaching base safely is 379 times set by Bonds' old pal, the Babe, in 1923. That Ruth record is safe — for now.

On other record tracks, the Yankees went into Monday with two players already having at least 100 RBIs — Jason Giambi (114) and Alfonso Soriano (100) — and three others closing in — Bernie Williams (99), Jorge Posada (96) and Robin Ventura (93). The last team to have five players with 100 RBIs were the 1936 Yankees, Joe DiMaggio's rookie year.

The most impressive pitching record already belongs to Atlanta's Greg Maddux, who reached 15 victories for the 15th consecutive season, matching the record set by Cy Young.

Members of the BYU racquetball team train for the season by running stairs, further strengthening their endurance. Under the direction of coach Dennis Fisher, the racquetball team currently reigns as national champions.

Coaching a success story

By Marc Owen
owen@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Dennis Fisher is one of the most successful coaches that BYU has ever had.

However, there is no stadium named after him and the athletes he coaches won't be signing million dollar contracts anytime soon.

In fact, coaching isn't even Fisher's day job.

Fisher work at BYU as the men's head athletic equipment manager, but his coaching speaks louder than his title.

Fisher is entering his seventh season as the head coach of the BYU racquetball team.

Under Fisher's leadership, BYU's racquetball program has collected one combined and five women's titles.

Despite his personal accomplishments at BYU, Fisher credits much of his success in coaching to his mentor, Jim Winterton, head coach of the U.S. national racquetball team.

"Jim is the best coach in the world," Fisher said. "I teach stroke mechanics the same way he does."

Mimicking his mentor has paid big dividends for Fisher and BYU's racquetball team over the past six years.

Fisher first started playing racquetball in the military at age 25. As he's gained more experience, he has progressed through the coaching ranks.

Fisher was recently invited to participate at the prominent Elite National Racquetball Training Camp in Colorado Springs.

During the weeklong camp, Fisher had the opportunity to train some of the top players in the world and learn from some of the top racquetball coaches.

Fisher and the BYU racquetball team recently held tryouts for the upcoming season. Fisher said most of the players have little to none competitive experience.

Fisher describes his role with the players as developmental.

"It's one thing to have talent. It's another thing to develop talent," Fisher said. "The developmental part of it is so satisfying."

Brett Bartel, a member of the racquetball team, said that Fisher's training is so intense, he's able to teach two years of racquetball technique in one.

Fisher said his greatest accomplishment in coaching was when the women won the National Championship.

"They totally floored me when they won it," he said. "I didn't expect them to do it."

This year however, Fisher has high expectations for his team.

"I believe we should be contending for another National Championship," he said.

Junior Paige Harris said of Fisher, "It's fun to be on the team because he is so intense about the sport."

Fisher said he hopes his intense approach to the sport will one day allow him to coach with the U.S. national team, which is his goal.

"I can only get better and improve my capabilities as a coach."

Apart from his work with the racquetball team, Fisher also coaches three professionals.

Fisher is currently working on his master's in sports psychology and has seven children.

Protect Yourself! Investigate Before You Invest!

For your own protection closely examine any offers which promise or guarantee large amounts of income/money. (old saying: 'if it's too good to be true' then it most likely is!)

Consider it a warning sign if you must buy something in order to start the program, or if you have to pay up front for the information. Please request information regarding the fee on every interview. Readers should beware of scams, especially when requiring payment up front.

Work at home ads usually require money up front to receive the books to contact the companies for work-at-home ideas. The Better Business Bureau said that the companies they have researched, for work at home, (stuffing envelopes, or making $1000 - $5000 /month), are NOT credible and you will usually lose money.

Be very careful NOT to give out any bank or Credit Card information unless you know the company well, or have checked them out thoroughly.

For a reliability report on a specific company, check first with your local Better Business Bureau. You will need the company's phone #.

(If there are any problems with a company that is advertised, please call the Daily Universe at 422-4523, ask for Nadine, so it can be checked out).

Some times information you will pay for can be found in your local libraries for FREE.

Utah school districts consider expanding drug testing policy

Extracurricular activities may be candidate for Utah testing

Provo High School marching band members are among the many students who may be randomly tested for drugs for involvement in extracurricular activities.

Provo High School seniors and student body officers Daniel Woodruff and Rebecca Pike are involved in many extracurricular organizations in their high school. If they were attending another school district in the country, their involvement would make them more prone to receive a random drug test.

But although the Supreme Court upheld the expansion of random drug testing to all students participating in extracurricular activities, Woodruff and Pike need not worry — many school districts in the Utah Valley area are continuing business as usual.

"[The ruling] opened the door for us if we need it," said Jarod Sites, coordinator for the student services of Provo School District. "But we are continuing as usual for now."

This past summer, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of an Oklahoma requirement of random drug testing to all students participating in "competitive" extracurricular activities, not just athletics.

These activities would include participation in choir, band and even in the future homemakers' club.

The ruling makes the option available on a national level, but individual districts are deciding what is best for them.

"The Provo School District currently feels there is no need for a random drug testing policy, but testing is only implemented when a student violated a safe and drug-free school policy. Then the district would work with the courts to administer the test," Sites said.

The district is also looking to the federal law, known as "no child left behind," to help deter drug use. The law states criteria of what school qualifies as a "dangerous school." If a school falls under the criteria, students have a right to transfer to a different school.

The Utah State Office of Education is currently asking for input from each district on criteria for a dangerous school. In a few months, the Education State Board will make a state definition of a dangerous school, Sites said.

"It would compel schools to address the problem before it gets out of hand," Sites said. He added that Provo School District feels that its students will not meet the criteria for a dangerous school because the district requires drug-free education in elementary, middle and high school classes.

In the Alpine School District, Public Information Officer Jerrilyn Mortensen said when the district heard about the ruling, the members discussed it and decided that there was no need to change the school's "no tolerance policy" to include the random drug testing.

Like Provo School District, Mortensen said Alpine schools instruct all students through education. Even with the schools' athletic teams, Mortensen said the district "doesn't recommend or encourage to take any substance that would be considered a drug even for body building, because we are not health professionals."

Scott Wilson, coordinator of student services for Nebo School District, said they currently have an aggressive drug policy. They handle each drug situation case by case, but most of the time when a student is caught with a possession of drugs, he or she is expelled for a minimum of 90 days and mandated treatment.

Under that policy, Nebo was able to handle last spring's prescription-drug abuse case where an assistant baseball coach distributed prescription drugs to Payson High students. Because the policy was able to handle and enforce the situation, the district did not see the need to change it after the Supreme Court ruling, Wilson said.

"We hesitate to get into drug testing cause it is a parent's responsibility," he said. "Our responsibility is to education."

For a while, Wilson did consider adding random drug testing to the school policy, but after speaking with other school districts, he realized that drug testing was more trouble than it was worth.

"I talked to other districts, and they got so many lawsuits," he said. "There is the issue of privacy and if the procedure was done right."

He also added that really street-smart kids know of ways to nullify the test results.

Still, if random drug testing was implemented at school, Woodruff and Pike see invasion of privacy a small price to pay for the long run.

"It would make me embarrassed that someone would think that I take drugs," Pike said. "But the loss of privacy is a moment in the scheme of things."

Woodruff said expanding the random drug search to include other extracurricular activities besides sports helps not target a specific group of students.

"But I don't think they won't find much cause those extracurricular clubs are meant to keep students off drugs," he said.
